Opportunity Indiana Update

On February 21, Ameritech Indiana reached an agreement with consumer groups, including the Indiana Consumer Counselor, on its Opportunity Indiana proposal to speed the development of an advanced communications system in Indiana while protecting basic phone rates.

Under terms of the agreement, Ameritech will invest $120 million in infrastructure over the next six years to provide an advanced communications network for schools, hospitals and major government centers. In addition, the company has made a commitment to contribute $5 million per year during that six-year period to a non-profit organization to fund information processing and telecommunications equipment, enabling schools like ISD to apply for grants to use this technology.

The ability to communicate face-to-face, even over long distances, will open up whole new worlds of communication for people with hearing disabilities. Deaf and hard-of-hearing people would gain greater comprehension and avoid the non-verbal communications nuances of TTY telephones. Emergency services and medical centers can have instant access to interpreters who can sign for Deaf patients. Special classroom programs would be available to Deaf students throughout the state. Once the fiber-optic network is in place, the uses for this technology will be limitless.

In return for its investment, Ameritech Indiana will receive regulatory flexibility for services where competition exists. Both parties hail the agreement as a triumph for the entire state. The next step toward making this a reality is approval of the agreement by the Indiana Utility Regulatory Commission (IURC).

Superintendent Laird has been involved with Ameritech Indiana on its Opportunity Indiana project, with hopes that ISD will be able to meet one of its 6-year goals; that is, to make ISD the state of art in its technological advancement for staff, faculty, families and students.

Disabilities Awareness Month

March is "Disabilities Awareness Month." While Deaf people do not consider themselves to be disabled, there are many people who are. Appreciation of diversity and respect for others are important qualities that should be a part of ISD's course of study.

As staff plan to meet students' needs this month they will be seeking ways to incorporate disabilities awareness into ISD's programs.

We're #1

Gallaudet is the only university in the world with programs and services designed for deaf and hard of hearing students. In 1993, U.S. News & World Report's annual college guide ranked Gallaudet first in academic excellence for liberal arts colleges in the North. While undergraduate programs are limited to deaf and hard of hearing students, our graduate programs are open to everyone. Gallaudet offers programs leading to A.A., A.A.S., B.A., B.S., M.A., M.S., Ed.S., and Ph.D. degrees in over 50 areas of study through its College of Arts and Sciences, School of Communication, School of Education and Human Services, School of Management, and School of Preparatory Studies.

The student body at Gallaudet is diverse, with a growing number of non-traditional students. More and more evening courses are offered to accommodate students who work during the day, and/or students who are enrolled at other member universities of the Consortium of Universities of the Washington Metropolitan Area who wish to take coursework at Gallaudet. Located in the heart of the nation's capital, Gallaudet provides easy access to the rich cultural heritage of Washington, D.C.

The College for Continuing Education offers programs and services for deaf and hard of hearing people, families, and professionals in the field of deafness. Programs include graduate training, sign language courses, adult literacy programs, and programs in the workplace for both employers and employees.

Whether you want a degree, new insights and skills, or to advance in your goals or career, think of Gallaudet as an educational option. The unique environment, excellent academic programs, and dynamic campus community provide outstanding opportunities in which to grow and develop.
